Full Name: Justin Lee

Expected Graduation Date (Month/Year): May 2019

1. Have you previously rushed Alpha Kappa Psi? (Yes/No)

No I have not previously rushed Alpha Kappa Psi.

2. What other organizations/extracurriculars are you a part of?

I am currently on the eboard for SGA and Toastmasters as VP of Communications and VP of Operations respectively. Other organizations include BKSA and Symphony.

3. How will you contribute to the fraternity? (max 300 words)

Primarily, to contribute to the fraternity, I would take into heart the Pillars as set by AKPsi, Integrity, Communication, Wisdom, Friendship, Creativity, and Brotherhood. These pillars whether they are official or not, I believe are the core principles that we should follow.

My personality as a straightforward, honest, and bright figure will definitely be a positive in the overall experience of AKPsi. Whether it be in social settings, professional settings, I make it a personal go to give it my all and only contribute to a positive outlook. The image that I have for myself and whatever organization I strive to be a part of is something that can offer support to others and above all else, have a great time in doing so.

Professionally, I also think I am a great candidate. With a background in design, content management, and studio work, I believe that I can offer a unique perspective on different fields of work contrary to the popular Babson standards. This also gives me a different perspective as a whole on whatever issues that arise, looking at things in a more creative sense and one that breaks the norms.

4. How do you measure success? (max 300 words)

An interviewer once asked me the question at the end, “Can you brag about yourself right now?”. I was at a loss. I knew building yourself up and portraying yourself as the strong confident person was the way to take on an interview, but to be outright asked to brag, it threw me in a loop. “I guess I can,” and thus progressed the most bullshit spiel about myself.

Can you brag about yourself, fit the shoes you’ve made? This is how I measure success, a sense of fulfillment and pride. I for one aspire to be, in the traditional sense, successful, making that six figure salary, owning a nice home, and married with children. This is all great, but that’s not true success. I posit that true success comes when you can look back and say, “This is my work, I put in my sweat and tears, I almost died, but I did it. I am proud.”

A second part of success is setting it for yourself. I am a strong believer that once you set your goals to someone else’s, i.e “I want to be a CEO because this person is also a CEO and is successful,” you have lost. It has to be centered around self and not the definitions and restrictions others place on you.

5. What previous experience from your past makes you feel like you relate to AKPsi?

A previous experience from my past that makes me feel like I relate to AKPsi is honestly the community. Rushing this semester, though time consuming and a struggle at times, was one of the most enjoyable experiences that I have had. The people that I have met and the connections I made I believe will stick with me through the future, even if I don't make it in. With all of its activities and the my drive to just have a great time while having a serious tone when needed I believe really fits in with the whole outlook of the current brotherhood, which I believe is, obviously the pillars from the last gathering, coupled with the desire to create a community of leaders and brothers who will always be available.
